Wedgwood Blue Jasper

U. S. Patent Office

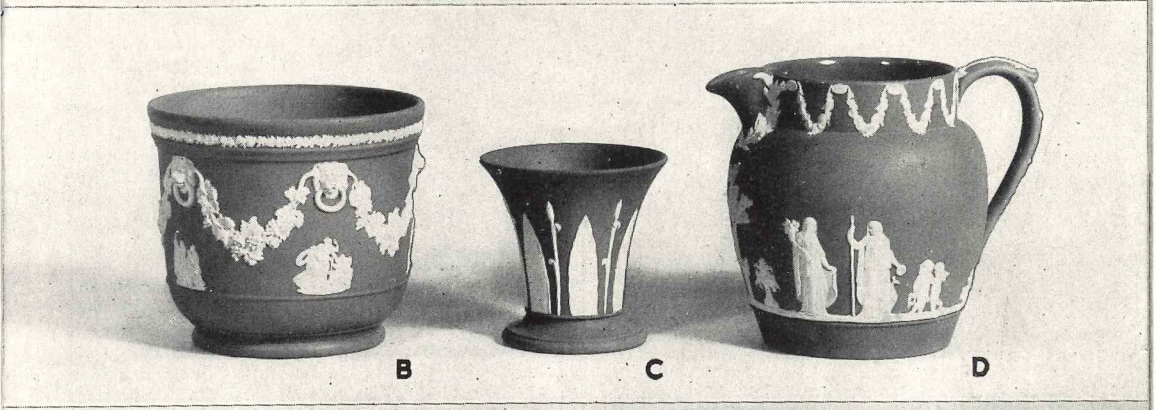
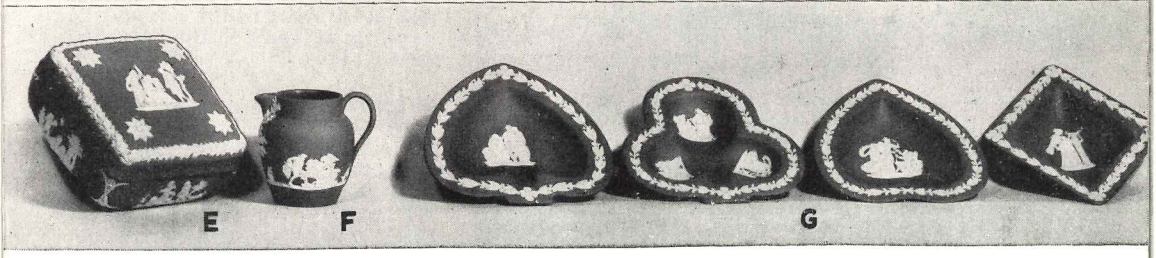
Design Division



B C D



E F G

This famous Wedgwood "Jasper" ware was invented by Josiah Wedgwood in 1774 and from that date on, numerous models were made by the famous artists he employed.

This outstanding product was an improvement and refinement over other contemporary products and became famous immediately. Up to the present it has retained its popularity because of its durability, modeling that is outstanding and classical decorations that are unsurpassed. These classical decorations are usually in relief, superadded to the body itself and carefully executed in detail.

During the war Wedgwood ceased to make this "Jasper" ware but has revived production — of which the present pieces are examples in traditional Wedgwood blue.
